It is, indeed, a distribute testranne that will measure that solution to part ? of the heat of a candle, but such as instrument is the radio actor used by astronomers to register the infinitesiabout the bathing remained mail amount of heat that our little speck of cosmic dust, crited the earth, receives from the distant suns that dwarf our own luminary and that are sunk so deep in space trut we subdivide candle heat to measure what warmth we receive from them. This radiometer, which con its of little disks blackened on one side placed on the rim of a light wheel supported horizontally on a pivot in a vacuum surrounded by glass and which revolves from force of light and heat, has registered a most interesting story under the scientific direction of Prof. E. F. Nichols of the Yerkes observaare treve, or he might have ordered tory. Prof. Nichols recently took the them from his tailor, but anyhow he heat of an ordinary candle at the dishad them on and thought they were a tance of one meter (39.37 luches) as a basis, and determined that his instrument received a little more than one ten-millionth the amount of that heat from Arcturus, the great star of the first magnitude in the constellation pagames than he moved them to fresh Bootes. Jupiter-a giant among our planets, but absolutely insignificant when compared with the distant Arcturus-gives us twice as much heat as that star. Through the blue-white star Vega, the brightest in the constellation Lyra, is of the same brilliancy as the yellowish Arcturus, it gives us only haif as much heat as the latter, according to Prof. Nichols' experiment. Our ringed neighbor, Saturn, gives us only one-sixth the amount of heat that we receive from Jupiter.-New York Herald,

The greater part of our tour was made by water, and once we were detained several days in the bed of a river owing to the insufficting of water for the draft of our busts. Some of them lay high and dry; but the office boat, which consisted of a single cabin, with large doors fore and aft, was in the strone. My friend sat in his cabin absorbed in official corshores. Suddenly looking up, he was dismayed to find a herd of about forty wild elephants, headed by a victorlooking leader, gazing stendily at the boat and its solltary occupant, Sout soldier as he was, he watched the leader with considerable tregidation: for on his action depended that to be relief, the leader, after a trumpet as two, turned disdainfully and crossed the stream. He breathed a sigh of relief, and had forgotten his lucky escape in the absorption of work-when, swish! through the cabin came dash after dash of water.
